"UC is trying to turn UC Health Plan into a plan that cannot compete with private plans sold in the marketplace because it has nothing to do with private insurance," UC spokesman Tim Butler said in an emailed statement. After receiving federal funding to expand the university's student health plan, UC increased the number of UC Health Plans, but in the lawsuit, the university says that by using the ACA instead of the student health plan, it can't be legally seen to act as part of a "public health alliance".. Students at UC campuses and state colleges and universities have had access to health plans since the 1980s because the schools were deemed as public health facilities and thus shielded from state regulations on health care financing. The law also allowed the Department of Community Health in 2010 to take on oversight of the system, and students at UC gained access to plans through the university's Affordable Care Plan (ACA) in 2013.. The lawsuit, filed on Thursday in Santa Clara County Superior Court, is the latest chapter in a decades-long legal battle over UC's student medical and dental care. Since the Affordable Care Act became law in 2010, the government has prohibited public universities from being required to establish plans within the state health law..
